Earthquake in Syria and Turkey

On the night between February 5 and 6, a devastatingly strong earthquake struck Turkey and Syria (magnitude 7.8), with its epicenter being located near Gaziantep, a city in South-Eastern Turkey. Just 100 km away lies Aleppo, where AVSI has been working for years and immediately took action to support the population.

On February 6 we launched an appeal: in 48 hours we raised 183,807 euros and we are starting to send funds to Syria.

AVSI in Syria: aid to the injured and help for the displaced people

The Saint Louis Hospital in Aleppo, which luckily is still fully functional after the earthquake, is precisely one of these hospitals supported by AVSI through the project "Syria. Open Hospitals." To date, more than 95,000 free treatments have been provided to poor Syrians. These days, more than 80 people injured during the earthquake have been able to receive treatment here.

With your donation to help those affected by the Turkey-Syria earthquake, we can:

- Treat injured people at the Saint Louis Hospital in Aleppo and the Latakia dispensary
- distribute essential items (winter clothes and shoes, blankets)
- give out warm meals and food to the most vulnerable people
- carry out money distribution to displaced people

« This year, I would like to highlight the great work to support the return of Christian communities to the Nineveh Plain in Iraq and the health care provided to so many poor sick people in Syria, particularly through the Open Hospitals project. »
